Active Listening in Parenting: How It Affects Growth In Children

Introduction

Active listening is a communication technique that involves listening carefully to what another person is saying, and then responding in a way that shows that you have heard and understood what they said. It is an important skill for parents to learn, as it can help them to better understand their children and build stronger relationships with them. In this blog post, we will explore active listening in parenting from a Christian perspective, looking at how the Bible can help us to understand the importance of this skill.

The Bible and Active Listening

The Bible is full of passages that emphasize the importance of listening. In Proverbs 18:13, it says, “He who gives an answer before he hears, it is folly and shame to him.” This verse emphasizes the importance of listening before responding, which is a key part of active listening. In James 1:19, it says, “Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak.” This verse encourages us to be quick to listen and slow to speak, which is another important part of active listening.

The Benefits of Active Listening

Active listening can have many benefits for parents and their children. It can help parents to better understand their children's feelings and needs, and it can help them to respond in a way that is more supportive and understanding. It can also help to build trust and respect between parents and children, as children will feel that their parents are really listening to them and taking their feelings and needs seriously.

Active Listening Strategies

There are many strategies that parents can use to practice active listening. One strategy is to repeat back what the child has said, to make sure that you have understood them correctly. Another strategy is to ask open-ended questions, which can help to encourage the child to talk more and give more information. It is also important to be patient and non-judgmental when listening to your child, and to avoid interrupting or giving advice.
