Attending and Plan Ignoring in Parenting in Christianity

Attending and plan ignoring are two parenting strategies that are often used in Christianity. Attending is when a parent is actively involved in their child's life, providing guidance and support. Plan ignoring is when a parent takes a more hands-off approach, allowing their child to make their own decisions and learn from their mistakes. Both strategies have their advantages and disadvantages, and it is important for parents to consider which approach is best for their family.

The Bible has much to say about parenting and how to raise children. Proverbs 22:6 states, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." This verse encourages parents to be actively involved in their child's life, teaching them right from wrong and instilling values that will stay with them into adulthood.

Ephesians 6:4 also speaks to parenting, saying, "Fathers, do not exasperate your children; instead, bring them up in the training and instruction of the Lord." This verse encourages parents to be patient and understanding with their children, while still providing guidance and instruction.

Both attending and plan ignoring can be effective parenting strategies, depending on the family's needs and the child's personality. Attending is often beneficial for younger children who need more guidance and structure, while plan ignoring can be beneficial for older children who are more independent and need to learn from their own mistakes. Ultimately, it is up to the parents to decide which approach is best for their family.
