Eastern Orthodoxy is a branch of Christianity that is based on the teachings of Jesus Christ and the apostles. It is one of the oldest Christian denominations, tracing its roots back to the early Church. The Eastern Orthodox Church is organized into a hierarchical structure, with the Patriarch of Constantinople at the head. Below him are the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, who are the heads of the four ancient Patriarchates. Below them are the Metropolitans, who are the heads of the local churches.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is divided into several autocephalous churches, which are independent of each other. Each autocephalous church is headed by a Patriarch or Metropolitan, who is responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the church. The autocephalous churches are further divided into dioceses, which are headed by bishops. The bishops are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the diocese.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is governed by a synod, which is composed of the Patriarchs, Metropolitans, and bishops of the autocephalous churches. The synod is responsible for making decisions on matters of doctrine and discipline. The synod also elects the Patriarch of Constantinople, who is the head of the Eastern Orthodox Church.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several monastic orders, which are headed by abbots or abbesses. Monasticism is an important part of the Eastern Orthodox Church, and the monastic orders are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the monasteries.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several lay organizations, which are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the laity. These organizations include the Orthodox Christian Fellowship, the Orthodox Christian Education Commission, and the Orthodox Christian Charities.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several religious orders, which are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the religious orders. These orders include the Order of St. Basil the Great, the Order of St. Gregory Palamas, and the Order of St. Ignatius of Antioch.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several missionary organizations, which are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the missionary work. These organizations include the Orthodox Christian Mission Center, the Orthodox Christian Missionary Society, and the Orthodox Christian Missionary Alliance.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several charitable organizations, which are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the charitable work. These organizations include the Orthodox Christian Charities, the Orthodox Christian Relief Fund, and the Orthodox Christian World Relief Fund.

The Eastern Orthodox Church is also divided into several educational organizations, which are responsible for the spiritual and administrative leadership of the educational work. These organizations include the Orthodox Christian Education Commission, the Orthodox Christian Institute, and the Orthodox Christian University.
