Marriage is a sacred union between two people, and it has been a part of Christian culture since the beginning. The Bible is full of references to marriage, and it is clear that God intended marriage to be a lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. In this blog post, we will explore the brief history of marriage in Christianity, from its roots in the Old Testament to its modern-day interpretations.

The Old Testament

The Bible's first mention of marriage is found in the book of Genesis, where God creates the first man and woman and commands them to "be fruitful and multiply" (Genesis 1:28). This is the foundation of marriage in Christianity, and it is clear that God intended marriage to be a lifelong commitment between a man and a woman.

The New Testament

The New Testament further emphasizes the importance of marriage in Christianity. Jesus himself speaks of marriage in the Gospels, and the Apostle Paul writes extensively about marriage in his letters. In Ephesians 5:22-33, Paul outlines the roles of husbands and wives in marriage, emphasizing the importance of mutual respect and love.

The Early Church

The early Church Fathers also wrote extensively about marriage in Christianity. St. Augustine, for example, wrote that marriage is a "sacrament of love" and that it should be entered into with the intention of lifelong commitment. St. Thomas Aquinas also wrote about marriage, emphasizing the importance of the marital bond and the need for mutual respect and love.

Modern Interpretations

Today, marriage in Christianity is still seen as a sacred union between two people. Many churches now offer pre-marriage counseling and marriage enrichment programs to help couples build strong, healthy marriages. Additionally, some churches offer marriage rededication ceremonies, which are a way for couples to reaffirm their commitment to each other and to God.
