The 1970s and 1980s saw a major revival of Pentecostalism in Ghana. This revival was characterized by a renewed emphasis on the power of the Holy Spirit, the importance of spiritual gifts, and the need for a personal relationship with God. This revival was a major factor in the growth of the Pentecostal movement in Ghana, and it has had a lasting impact on the country's religious landscape.

The Pentecostal revival in Ghana began in the 1970s, when a number of charismatic preachers began to preach in the country. These preachers emphasized the power of the Holy Spirit and the importance of spiritual gifts, such as speaking in tongues and prophecy. They also emphasized the need for a personal relationship with God, and the importance of prayer and Bible study.

The revival quickly spread throughout the country, and by the 1980s, Pentecostalism had become the dominant form of Christianity in Ghana. This revival was characterized by a renewed emphasis on the power of the Holy Spirit, the importance of spiritual gifts, and the need for a personal relationship with God.

The revival also had a major impact on the social and political life of Ghana. Pentecostalism provided a platform for social and political activism, and it was used to challenge the status quo and to promote social justice. Pentecostal churches also provided a safe haven for those who were persecuted for their beliefs, and they provided a place for people to come together and share their faith.

The revival also had a major impact on the economy of Ghana. Pentecostal churches provided a source of income for many people, and they also provided a platform for entrepreneurs to start businesses. This helped to create jobs and to stimulate economic growth.

The revival of Pentecostalism in Ghana has had a lasting impact on the country's religious landscape. Pentecostalism is now the dominant form of Christianity in Ghana, and it has had a major influence on the country's culture and society.
