Israel as a Chosen People in Christianity

Introduction

The concept of Israel as a chosen people is a central theme in Christianity. It is based on the belief that God chose the Israelites to be his special people and to receive his blessings. This concept is found throughout the Bible, from the Old Testament to the New Testament. In this blog post, we will explore the concept of Israel as a chosen people in Christianity, looking at the biblical basis for this belief and its implications for Christians today.

God's Covenant with Israel

The concept of Israel as a chosen people is rooted in the covenant that God made with the Israelites. In the book of Exodus, God tells Moses: "You shall be to me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" (Exodus 19:6). This covenant was a special relationship between God and the Israelites, in which God promised to bless them and protect them if they followed his laws and commandments.

God's Promise of a Messiah

God also promised the Israelites that he would send a Messiah to save them from their enemies and to bring them into a new era of peace and prosperity. This promise is found in the book of Isaiah, where God says: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isaiah 9:6).

The New Covenant

The concept of Israel as a chosen people is also found in the New Testament, where Jesus is seen as the fulfillment of God's promise of a Messiah. In the book of Matthew, Jesus says: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matthew 5:17). Jesus' death and resurrection brought about a new covenant between God and his people, in which all people, not just the Israelites, could be saved and receive God's blessings.
