Online schooling brings isolation and lack of motivation

Online schooling has become increasingly popular in recent years, as more and more students are opting to take classes online. While this can be a great way to get an education, it can also lead to feelings of isolation and lack of motivation. As Christians, we must be aware of the potential pitfalls of online schooling and strive to ensure that our students are supported and encouraged in their studies.

The Bible speaks to us about the importance of community and fellowship. In Hebrews 10:24-25, we are encouraged to “consider how to stir up one another to love and good works, not neglecting to meet together, as is the habit of some, but encouraging one another, and all the more as you see the Day drawing near.” This passage reminds us that we need to be intentional about connecting with others, even when we are studying online.

When students are studying online, they may feel isolated and disconnected from their peers. This can lead to a lack of motivation, as students may not feel supported or encouraged in their studies. It is important for us to be aware of this potential issue and to take steps to ensure that our students are connected and supported.

One way to do this is to create an online community for students to connect with each other. This could be done through a discussion forum, a chat room, or even a virtual study group. This will give students the opportunity to interact with each other and to ask questions and get feedback on their studies.

Another way to support students is to provide them with resources and tools to help them stay motivated. This could include online tutorials, study guides, and other materials that can help them stay on track with their studies. Additionally, providing students with access to mentors or tutors can be a great way to ensure that they are getting the support they need.

Finally, it is important to remember that online schooling can be a great way to get an education, but it is important to be aware of the potential pitfalls. By creating an online community, providing resources and tools, and offering mentorship, we can ensure that our students are supported and encouraged in their studies.
