Revelation Knowledge is not a tool for self-glorification

Revelation knowledge is a term used to describe the knowledge that comes from God. It is a type of knowledge that is not accessible to everyone, but is only given to those who seek it. In Christianity, revelation knowledge is not meant to be used as a tool for self-glorification, but rather as a way to deepen one's understanding of God and His will.

The Bible is full of examples of revelation knowledge being used for the benefit of others. In the book of Daniel, Daniel is given a vision of the future and is told to share it with the people of Israel. In the book of Revelation, John is given a vision of the end times and is told to share it with the church. In both cases, the knowledge was not meant to be used for personal gain, but rather to help others understand God's will.

The Bible also warns against using revelation knowledge for self-glorification. In the book of James, it says, "Let not many of you become teachers, my brethren, knowing that as such we shall incur a stricter judgment." (James 3:1) This verse is a warning against using revelation knowledge to gain power or influence over others.

Revelation knowledge is meant to be used to help others understand God's will and to bring glory to Him. It is not meant to be used as a tool for self-promotion or self-glorification. As Christians, we should use revelation knowledge to help others understand God's will and to bring glory to Him.

When it comes to using revelation knowledge, it is important to remember that it is not meant to be used as a tool for self-promotion or self-glorification. Instead, it should be used to help others understand God's will and to bring glory to Him.
