The Cambodian Revival of the 1990s was a period of spiritual renewal and growth in the country of Cambodia. It was a time of great hope and optimism for the people of Cambodia, as they experienced a spiritual awakening and a renewed sense of purpose.

The revival began in the early 1990s, when a group of Christian missionaries from the United States and other countries began to travel to Cambodia to share the gospel. These missionaries were met with great enthusiasm by the Cambodian people, who were eager to learn more about the Christian faith.

The revival was marked by a number of significant events, including the establishment of the first Christian church in Cambodia, the opening of a Bible school, and the formation of a Christian radio station. These events helped to spread the gospel throughout the country and to bring hope and healing to the people of Cambodia.

The revival also saw a dramatic increase in the number of converts to Christianity. By the end of the 1990s, there were an estimated 200,000 Christians in Cambodia, up from just a few thousand at the start of the decade. This growth was largely due to the efforts of the missionaries, who worked tirelessly to share the gospel and to bring hope and healing to the people of Cambodia.

The revival also had a profound impact on the culture of Cambodia. The Christian faith brought with it a sense of hope and purpose, and it helped to bring about a new era of peace and stability in the country. The revival also helped to bring about a new sense of unity among the people of Cambodia, as they began to see themselves as part of a larger Christian community.
