The Korean Pentecost of 1907 is a significant event in the history of Christianity in Korea. It is widely regarded as the beginning of the modern Korean church and is seen as a major turning point in the history of Korean Christianity. The event is often referred to as the “Korean Revival” or the “Korean Awakening” and is seen as a major milestone in the spread of the gospel in Korea.

The Korean Pentecost began on April 18, 1907, when a group of Korean Christians gathered in Pyongyang for a prayer meeting. During the meeting, the group experienced a powerful outpouring of the Holy Spirit, which resulted in a spiritual awakening among the participants. The revival spread quickly throughout the country, and within a few months, thousands of Koreans had been converted to Christianity.

The impact of the Korean Pentecost on Korean society and culture was profound. The revival brought about a dramatic shift in the religious landscape of Korea, as Christianity quickly became the dominant religion in the country. The revival also had a significant impact on the political and social landscape of Korea, as it provided a platform for the emergence of a new generation of Christian leaders who sought to bring about social and political reform.

The Korean Pentecost also had a profound impact on the culture of Korea. The revival brought about a new emphasis on education, as many of the new converts sought to learn more about their faith. This led to the establishment of numerous schools and universities, which provided a platform for the spread of Christian ideas and values. The revival also brought about a new emphasis on the importance of family and community, as the new converts sought to build strong relationships with their neighbors and to create a sense of unity among the Korean people.

The Korean Pentecost was also a major milestone in the spread of the gospel in Korea. The revival provided a platform for the spread of the gospel to the Korean people, and it is estimated that by the end of the revival, over one million Koreans had been converted to Christianity. The revival also provided a platform for the growth of the Korean church, as many of the new converts joined existing churches or established new ones.

The Korean Pentecost is often seen as a fulfillment of the prophecy found in the book of Acts, which states: “And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams.” (Acts 2:17). This prophecy was fulfilled in the Korean Pentecost, as the outpouring of the Holy Spirit resulted in a spiritual awakening among the Korean people.
