In the Christian faith, the Lamb of God is seen as a symbol of Jesus's perfect sacrifice for the sins of mankind. The Lamb of God is mentioned several times in the New Testament, and its significance is often discussed in Christian theology.

The Lamb of God is first mentioned in the Gospel of John, where John the Baptist declares that Jesus is "the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). This statement is a powerful declaration of Jesus's mission to save mankind from their sins. The Lamb of God is also mentioned in the book of Revelation, where it is described as "the Lamb that was slain" (Revelation 5:12).
