Protestantism is a major branch of Christianity that originated with the Protestant Reformation in the 16th century. It is one of the three major divisions of Christianity, along with Roman Catholicism and Eastern Orthodoxy. Protestantism is a broad term that encompasses a wide variety of theologies and practices.

The core beliefs of Protestantism are based on the teachings of the Bible, particularly the New Testament. These beliefs include the belief in the Trinity, the divinity of Jesus Christ, the authority of Scripture, salvation by grace through faith, and the importance of evangelism.

The main practices of Protestantism include worship services, prayer, Bible study, and evangelism. Worship services typically involve singing hymns, reading Scripture, and preaching. Prayer is an important part of Protestantism, and many Protestants pray daily. Bible study is also an important part of Protestantism, and many Protestants read the Bible regularly. Evangelism is an important part of Protestantism, and many Protestants are actively involved in sharing their faith with others.

The Bible is the central source of authority for Protestantism. The Bible is seen as the inspired Word of God, and it is the basis for all of the beliefs and practices of Protestantism. The Bible is divided into two main sections: the Old Testament and the New Testament. The Old Testament contains the books of the Hebrew Bible, while the New Testament contains the books of the Christian Bible.

The Bible is the source of many of the core beliefs of Protestantism. For example, the Bible teaches that there is one God who is the Creator of all things (Genesis 1:1). It also teaches that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Savior of the world (John 3:16). The Bible also teaches that salvation is by grace through faith in Jesus Christ (Ephesians 2:8-9).
