Domestic violence in marriage is a pervasive problem that has affected many families worldwide. This act of aggression can take many forms, and it is important to understand the different types of domestic violence to combat it effectively. In this post, we will examine some of the most common types of domestic violence in marriage and how to overcome them.

Physical Abuse

Physical abuse is the most visible and well-known type of domestic violence. It involves the use of force or violence to cause harm or injury to a spouse. This form of abuse often includes hitting, slapping, pushing, or other types of physical harm. In 1 Corinthians 7:3-5, the Bible reminds us that marriage is a union of love, respect, and mutual understanding and that any form of violence is against God's will.

Emotional Abuse

Emotional abuse is a type of domestic violence that involves psychological harm. This form of abuse can include verbal threats, intimidation, humiliation, and isolation. Emotional abuse can be equally as harmful as physical abuse and can leave deep psychological scars. In Ephesians 4:31-32, the Bible teaches us to “Get rid of all bitterness, rage, and anger, brawling, and slander, along with every form of malice. Be kind and compassionate to one another, forgiving each other, just as in Christ God forgave you.”

Financial Abuse

Financial abuse is a less talked about but equally harmful type of domestic violence. It involves the manipulation and control of a spouse’s finances, making them entirely dependent on their abuser. This form of abuse can lead to economic hardship, which can have long-term consequences. In Proverbs 22:7, the Bible reminds us that “The rich rule over the poor, and the borrower is a slave to the lender.”
